

Chuy

Since this little kitten is most definitely a boy, it's a good thing he was rescued behind a Chuy's restaurant and not La Margarita! One evening a waitress at Chuy's heard a forlorn little feline voice crying out near their patio. She took a break and tracked down the source - this gorgeous little guy was hiding in the bushes and wailing away. He was very friendly, though, and let her pick him up so she took him home. She named him Chuy and fell in love with him, and thought he'd make a wonderful addition to her household that already had several cats.

Unfortunately, as part of his routine health checkup at the vet, they found that Chuy has the feline leukemia virus. He couldn't stay in her home without a high risk of spreading FeLV to her other cats - but trying to find someplace safe for him to go proved almost impossible. Almost...until she called Shadow Cats, one of a very few places that rescue FeLV kitties. Now Chuy is happily exploring his new home in Cookie's Place at the sanctuary. He's just a little kitten, but has a BIG personality - he's playful, affectionate, and seems to talk all the time. We're not sure of every word, but it sounds to us like he's saying "I like it here!"
