

Inge

Sometimes you'll see stories about a cat narrowly escaping the jaws of death, and perhaps there's a bit of exaggeration as to just how close a call it was. But Inge really was down to her very last day when Shadow Cats saved her.

Almost no other group in Central Texas takes in cats who have the feline leukemia virus, so Cookie's Place always stays full. And when there's no room for another, that usually means an unfortunate cat who comes into a municipal shelter has no other options. That's what happened to Inge - she arrived at Austin's Town Lake Animal Center and when they discovered that she was feline leukemia positive they sent her name out to area rescue groups and gave her three days to find a home. Since Cookie's Place was full we were unable to take her, and no other rescuer came forward.

And then one of our little angels passed suddenly and unexpectedly. And in our grief we realized that we now had a spot for Inge...on her third and final day. So as we say at the sanctuary, the cycle continues; we said goodbye to Truman and opened our hearts and arms to Inge. She's a sweet, charming, loving little girl who will now live her best life, with all the love we can give her.
