

Lacey

At Austin's Town Lake Animal Center, when they get a cat who tests positive for the feline leukemia virus it means that they are not eligible for adoption. Their name goes out on a list to various rescue groups in the area, and they have only a few days to find a guardian angel or.....well, we don't like to think about the alternative. Luckily for Lacey there was a spot open in the leukemia suite at the sanctuary and she found a home here.

Now you can often spot Lacey on the KittyCam, basking in her new surroundings. She has an amazingly soft, lustrous coat and very distinct markings that make her easy to pick out. And also.....a bit of a split personality. You can pick her up and cradle her in your arms like a baby, and she'll just purr away and bat her eyes at you. Or, once in a while instead of purring she may decide to snap at you instead! If you happen to be another cat - especially a kitten - same thing. Luckily for Lacey, she's now surrounded by guardian angels who are both patient and persistent. Over time, she'll learn that purring is lots better than biting. And thanks to Shadow Cats, she'll have the time to learn that, in a safe and loving environment.
