

Titus

Meet the new kid in Cookie's Place! It's kitten season right now, and Titus was trapped recently in a local community cat colony. As part of the normal veterinary checks he was tested for the feline leukemia virus and came up positive. That's pretty bad luck for a kitten - but then, it's pretty good luck that he was already under the care of Shadow Cats, so he just moved right into the sanctuary and will join the other FeLV cats in the KittyCam room.

We'll probably have to update Titus' picture as he grows up - he's pretty tiny right now, only a couple of months old - but this is what you'll be seeing on the KittyCam for a while as he begins to explore his new surroundings. We're not sure just how Titus got his name. Titus Andronicus, of course, was a Roman general in one of Shakespeare's early works who spends most of the play engaged in a cycle of revenge against Tamora, queen of the Goths. We're really hoping that he was named after someone else...
